“ Alan and I were first cousins and grew up together during the frequent visits of our families.
We made forts and invaded them. We “fought “ all day with two by fours as swords and trash can lids as shields. We went on missions ordered by our commanding officer (grandmother) Ma Kerr, to gather blackberries for a cobbler she made that evening. I’m sure the missions were made up to get those two wild Indians out of her hair for the afternoon.
This was the time when no one locked their doors and two pre-teenage boys could leave the house for hours roaming the woods and although they wouldn’t know exactly where we were, the grown-ups would know for certain we would be home in time to wash up for supper.
I remember the good times with family sitting all around talking and Alan and I waking up the next morning on a “Baptist Pallet” in one of the bedrooms. Sorry for his passing. I know our family is grieving. Even the ones not seen for a while.
